It is a plain matter of United States history. All United States histories record the main facts.

Magnetle Power.

What is the power of the strongest magnet known, L. e. with what force does it tend to draw iron toward it?

This can't be well determined. The earth itself is a magnet, and the strongest one. Magnetism is measured on a basis of units called electric units or electro-magnetic units. These are the ampere, the ohm, the volt, etc., and they measure intensity resistance and they measure intensity, resistance and motive force, all of which vary greatly under different conditions
